At an after-hour the same night Friedrich went to Berlin--met by acclamation enough. He slept there, not without tumult of dreams, one may fancy; and on awakening next morning, the first sound he heard was that of the Regiment Glasenap under his windows, swearing fealty to the new King. He sprang out of bed in a tempest of emotion; bustled distractedly to and fro, wildly weeping: Pollnitz, who came into the anteroom, found him in this state, half-dressed, with disheveled hair, in tears, and as if beside himself. These huzzahings only tell me what I have lost! said the new King. He was in great suffering, suggested Pollnitz; he is now at rest. True, he suffered; but he was here with us, and now--16 Ranke (ii., 46, 47), from certain Fragments, still in manuscript, of Pollnitzs Memairen. INDEX. Abel, D. Otto, cited, ii. 342 n.
